Join us for a Visiting Scholar Research Day with Dr Andrew Wilkins, jointly hosted by Curtin's Sociology of Education and Education Leadership and Policy Research Clusters. The day will begin with a keynote from Dr Wilkins in which he will explore questions shaping contemporary education policy, governance and leadership, answering questions from the audience. Andrew will discuss two topics central to his current research: teacher wellbeing, psychological sciences and the resilient worker; and the role of artificial intelligence in the organisation of teachers' work. He will also discuss writing and publishing, drawing on his experience as Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Education Policy.

Following this, various Curtin School of Education Researchers will present works in progress, with opportunity to exchange ideas with colleagues. After lunch, early and mid career researchers are invited to "drop in" to engage in informal conversation with Dr Wilkins, who is an lead editor of a leading Q1 journal, about research and publishing. The event will conclude with a panel featuring Dr Wilkins, Professor Glenn Savage (University of Melbourne), and Kim Balnaves, examining artificial intelligence and the emerging possibilities, tensions and challenges it presents for education research. The event is open to all Curtin Staff and Students. There are limited places for this event, so register soon Via the Eventbrite link below.
